

Lloyd A. Johnson's Memoir

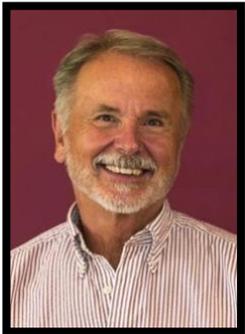

My Truth: My Journey Toward Servant Leadership

The story of a Black man's struggle to overcome life's challenges and his mistakes, to find positives in adversity, and to make his beloved, but flawed, nation a better place than he found it. To read Lloyd's memoir, please click here.

"Viewpoint: What Too Many Whites Refuse to See".

Robert Pawlicki, Ph.D., Savannah Morning News. Aug 30, 2020

An important essay on institutionalized racism in the U.S., stemming from America's legacy of the enslavement of Black people. A challenge for self-examination and action. To read Dr. Pawlicki's complete article, please click here.

Winning Essay 2020 Writing Competition.

Mecca R. Aikens. Mercer University, Junior; Judge Eugene H. Gadsden Scholar
2018 - 2020. Jun, 2020

This summer the Savannah 100 Foundation conducted its First Annual Essay contest - on voter suppression. Contestants were to consider, using legal concepts, whether a local government's requirement that prospective voters affix a postage stamp to to an absentee ballot constitutes a poll tax - and therefore violates the U.S. Constitution. To read Mecca Aikens' award-winning essay, please click here.

How Did We Get Here? 163 Years of The Atlantic's Writing on Race and Racism in America. Gillian B. White. The Atlantic. Jun 16, 2020

These readings – on health, civil rights, policing, economic inequality and other societal institutions - encompass writing on race and racism that spans The Atlantic's lifetime—from its founding, in 1857, to the present day. In it you'll find historical works from the archive, as well as more recent stories that provide critical analysis to contextualize the importance of a given event, policy, or era. To access these readings, please click here.